Interview With The Principal

1. Integration of Ancient wisdom in modern education :

The old mythological books preserved by ancient civilizations should not be questioned in terms of their trustworthiness. The more important question is whether the knowledge preserved thoughts written in these books can be absorbed into our daily lives in a positive way.

The 'ILLID' and 'Odyssey' are the Greek mythological epics in which humans are depicted with wings. In my opinion, these representations are a product of human imagination. The ancients may have created this imagery to differentiate between the disciples of God, portraying them with white wings as a sign of positive vibes and as knowledge-givers to the people of that period.

The topic for discussion should be whether we can apply the knowledge provided by these texts to our current lifestyles. We should strive to understand and absorb the deeper meanings of their words and deeds. In the case studies I have mentioned the relevance of their actions in today's corporate sector and on social media platforms.

2. Personal journey in academia:

In my 35-year career, I have treated all my students, assistants, and co-staff members as equals, without any kind of discrimination. It does not matter if one is closer to me or if another is more outgoing; I have never made distinctions. No one has the right to do this to anyone. Everyone has positive skills as well as negative aspects. In the world, no one is 100 percent correct nor 100 percent wrong. According to Indian Vedas, there are 14 vidyas and 64 kalas, making a grand total of 78. Keeping in mind today's world, the 79th kala is advertising. From these, everyone has some skill segment within them. The thing is, one may not be aware of that aspect of their skills. As one explores the world, they might discover their inner talents as they grow older. Sometimes, a person may realize the same in their late 20s or 30s. A person pursuing a specific degree is not limited to that field. For example, the author of Sherlock Holmes was a dentist, and a chartered accountant might be interested in sketching. There is no rule that if one enters a specific field, that person should be limited to that field. In the past, people drew lines between various specializations, such as Science, Commerce, and Arts, and categorized them, giving limitations to those subjects. In my opinion, one should complete their basic education and pursue with his / her most prominent qualities. It is much easier to criticize or point out mistakes.

Interview With The Principal

Anyone can express their opinion, as we live in a democratic nation. When one tries to acknowledge other's good inner qualities and helps them realize their self-worth, the bond between two individuals enhances. One does not need to adopt different forms of leadership along the way.

When you talk to a human being with humanity, a positive attitude, and positive energy, it helps to connect with the people around you.

When you truly put in the effort to see activities without a critical opinion, you will reach the reality.

When Prince Charles of England visited, he observed Mumbai's dabbawalas. The way these people, wearing white hats and applying a tilak on their foreheads, managed the synchronized system daily ensuring that the correct person received the correct tiffin without any misplacement or wrong delivery amazed the prince.

Even though these people were uneducated, they managed their service in such an error-free manner. After Prince Charles's recognition, the business of the dabbawalas gained social recognition.

3. Balancing diverse interests :

I am a member of the Dombivali Gymkhana, where I actively engage in sports activities. When college students come with an enthusiastic vision to participate in sports tournaments, I make an effort to enlist these events in the newspaper and share them with the college management. I also post about these activities on social media platforms like Instagram and Facebook. With a strong interest in culture, I motivate students to participate as much as they can to find their fit.

Interview With The Principal

Gaining recognition on a wider scale can significantly motivate individuals towards personal enhancement. The age between 11 and 22 is a crucial period of development, spanning from the first year of junior college to post-graduation. During this time, students form critical opinions about various aspects of life, which can be either positive or negative. To mitigate this scenario, I encourage students to actively participate in sports, cultural committees, the Rotaract Club, and the National Service Scheme (NSS). This involvement helps them recognize the diversity around them rather than adopting a one-sided perspective.

My philosophy and psychology are rooted in the belief that every student has potential. They are all here to learn different activities alongside their academic pursuits.

Sometimes, students may engage in wrongful deeds, such as cheating in exams or becoming addicted to unethical means. However, this does not define them as bad individuals. Every parent envisions their child as a person of great deeds and a successful career. When parents pay their children's fees, they often have a secret aim: that their child should receive a quality education that leads to success, whether in a job or business, while also becoming a genuine citizen.

I have led the NSS for 11 years, organized camps, and managed various aspects of the program, which has been invaluable in identifying positive opportunities today.

4. Vision for future generations:

I have noticed that students who study in English medium or in vernacular medium often do not possess a comprehensive vocabulary in English or in local language. They tend to hybridize their regional language with English. Typically, they do not read entire English books or stay updated with general knowledge or mythological literature in any language. Instead, they spend most of their time on social media or using technology in ways that do not contribute to acquiring the right set of knowledge. When individuals invest their time on social media platforms, they miss out on opportunities to read books or gain insights related to their careers, making it more challenging for them to make informed career choices.

Interview With The Principal

Secondly, in business or profession, the sole objective should not be merely making money. One should also have a life objective—a path on which they can walk. As humans, we have various dimensions; we are not robots. It is essential to define an objective for yourself, an aim that you wish to achieve in the future. Alongside your main plan, it is also wise to have alternative options, such as Plan B and Plan C, ready.

In the field of Commerce, it is common for students to opt for CA, CMA & CS exams. While this is a valuable certification, some of these students do not have any alternate plans for themselves. They simply continue to attempt the exams, which can lead to feelings of depression.

In business or a job, one should not always consider money as the sole purpose. Other factors, such as personal development and skills upgrading, also matters significantly.

Individuals should recognize their inner talents without comparing themselves to others. They should choose the best career for themselves, one where they enjoy the work and feel suited to excel.

5.Upcoming publications:

With a background I have cordial relations with police department and political leaders too.

Already I have written books on Indian mythology and management aspects in the same.I am planning to write many more books on the same subject. Indian knowledge system (IKS) introduced by National Education policy (NEP) is the best way to connect Indian youths to greater Indian Culture.

Shaheed-e-Azam

He came from a family deeply involved in the freedom struggle. His father, Kishan Singh Sandhu, and his uncles were active participants in the freedom movement. The political environment at home played a significant role in shaping his revolutionary ideals.

A few of the lesser known facts of Bhagat Singh include various incidents which shed light on his persona, beyond what is commonly found in textbooks.

Recounting a few such incidents-

Bhagat Singh was so disturbed by the Jallianwala Bagh massacre that he collected the mud mixed with Indian Blood in a bottle from Jallianwala Bagh and worshiped it every day for his whole life.

In college, he was a great actor and played several roles in plays like 'Rana Pratap' and 'Bharat-Durdasha'.

After witnessing the Hindu-Muslim riots that broke out after Gandhi disbanded the Non-Cooperation Movement, he started to question religious ideologies in society. And this is what made him an Atheist.

Bhagat Singh had a depth to his character. His story is a story that, although repeated multiple times in textbooks, newspapers, pop culture music and movies, remains inadequate in recounting his patriotism and his fervent love to see India free from British colonial rule.

A Better Way Forward

As another Ganesh Chaturthi passes, many of us are left with mixed feelings filled with joy from the festivities but also concerned by the aftermath. Streets littered with debris from immersions, air thick with the smoke of firecrackers, and polluted water remind us of the need to rethink how we celebrate our beloved festivals. Despite the awareness campaigns, most of us still find ourselves resorting to the same old, unsustainable ways of celebration. But here's the good news: the power to change is in our hands!

An eco-friendly festival is not just a trendy term; it's a way to show respect to both tradition and the environment. For example, during this Ganesh Chaturthi, some communities used natural clay idols that dissolve harmlessly in water and adopted simple, biodegradable decorations. It's these small steps that make a huge difference. We can still celebrate with the same enthusiasm and devotion, but with a mindful approach that reduces harm to our surroundings.

However, let's be honest—old habits die hard. Firecrackers and elaborate POP idols have become ingrained in our celebrations. Many feel like it won't be festive enough without these elements. But isn't it time we look at it differently? Many people who've adopted sustainable ways rave about the positive effects. There's something incredibly fulfilling about celebrating without leaving behind a trail of waste and pollution. It brings a sense of responsibility and pride that makes the festival even more enjoyable.

Restoring the Shore: Enactus Leads Post- Ganpati Beach Cleanup

On the 5th of September, 2024, the Enactus committee of our college organized a beach cleanup at Juhu Beach, Mumbai. This initiative took place following Ganpati Visarjan, which, while spiritually enriching, often leaves the beaches littered with waste due to the use of non-eco-friendly Ganpati idols and decorations.

Ganpati Visarjan is a significant event in India, where thousands immerse beautifully crafted idols in the sea. However, many of these idols are made from non-biodegradable materials like Plaster of Paris (PoP) and adorned with toxic paints that harm marine life and pollute the environment. This year was no different, and Juhu Beach was left covered with remnants of these idols, plastic, flowers, and other waste.

The event saw enthusiastic participation from heads and members who were all eager to contribute to restoring the beauty of the beach. Armed with gloves, garbage bags, and equipment, the team spent hours collecting non-biodegradable waste, including plastic, decorations, and remnants of idols. The cleanup drive was not just an effort to preserve the environment, but also a way to promote environmental awareness and responsibility among the community.

This beach cleanup was more than just a service activity; it reflected the spirit of sustainability and social responsibility that Enactus embodies. The students were deeply engaged in discussions about the importance of eco-friendly Ganpati celebrations and the need to transition to more sustainable practices for future festivals.

Book Review

Wise and Otherwise: A salute to Life

NAME OF THE AUTHOR :- Sudha Murthy

GENRE :- Non-Fiction, Anthology

PUBLISHER :- Penguin India

Sudha Murthy's Wise and Otherwise is a powerful collection of 51 short stories, each portraying the extraordinary within the ordinary. The book is told in a simple yet thought-provoking manner.

The strength of the book lies in its simplicity— Murthy writes in a way that is easy to understand yet leaves a lasting impression. Whether it's a tale about a heartwarming gesture or an encounter with betrayal, each story makes one reflect on the values of kindness, empathy, and integrity.

Once I started reading the book, I couldn't put it down. One of the standout stories in the book according to me is "When a Daughter Dares," Murthy shares the tale of a young girl who challenges age-old traditions to pursue education against her family's wishes. The girl's courage to stand up for herself in a conservative society is very inspiring. It's an empowering chapter that reminds readers of the value of self-confidence and the power of determination.

The book is not just a collection of stories, it's a gentle nudge for readers to reconsider their own actions, particularly when faced with moral dilemmas.

Wise and Otherwise is a wonderful book that teaches us about people, life, and what truly matters. Sudha Murthy's straightforward storytelling makes it a great read for anyone looking for inspiration and wisdom in everyday life.

Shaheed-e-Azam

The name spelled out in the heading sounds rather intriguing. A name unheard of, almost not known to us. However, 'Shaheed-e-Azam' is actually the honorable title given to the valorous freedom fighter 'Bhagat Singh.'

Bhagat Singh's name remains etched in Indian history for his unshrinking bravado. He was only 23 years old when he was hanged to death along with Raj Guru and Sukhdev in 1931.

Bhagat Singh was born on 28 September 1907.

He was an avid reader and a writer. He had a deep love for literature and philosophy. He devoured books and newspapers in multiple languages, including English, Urdu, and Punjabi. His reading list included works by Marx, Lenin, and other socialist thinkers.

He was influenced by the works of the Russian Revolution and also read about the American and French revolutions.

He held a deep affection for poetry, drawing inspiration from poets like Allama Iqbal and Ram Prasad Bismil.

Bhagat Singh was also a writer. He adopted various pen names while contributing to newspapers. Among them were "Balwant," and "Rajguru. Bhagat Singh's writings, including his letters and essays, provide valuable insights into his ideological beliefs and vision for India. His famous letter to the British judge during his trial, known as the "Letter to the Judge," eloquently outlines his political views and the reasons for his revolutionary action.

Poem

An Unreached Scream...

She was scared,
Scared by demons under her bed.
She could hear,
Hear the voices screaming in her head.

She tried to run,
Run away from the world like hell.
She wanted to live,
A life where her misery could expel.

She was waiting,
Waiting for her destiny to change.
She was trying,
Trying her broken pieces to arrange.

She cried her lungs out,
But her sore throat couldn't yell.
She counted on God,
But the sin of her innocent soul,
He also couldn't tell.
